

Life outside the laboratory

2

Despite the increasing number of microbiologists, there will always be bacteria outside the lab which will remain unknown.

wonder what it's like out there.

3

The best places to live are already occupied.

The colonization of a new microniche remains, for most of them, a dream.

Homeless, trusting in the wind and water, these bacteria continue to survive.

Some are even found where no creature in its right mind should live.

A despairing few surrender their fates to the microbiologist ...

but others trust in a better future

Microniche - A habitat supplying the factors necessary for the existence of an organism.